Precautions

Agarwood bracelets should not be exposed to water, as they may easily crack. If you accidentally get a little tap water on the agarwood bracelet when washing your hands, just wipe it with a clean cloth immediately. Be careful not to use scented paper towels to wipe the agarwood bracelets to prevent odor transfer. Remember, agarwood especially should not come into contact with hot water, nor warm water. The characteristics of agarwood itself make it easy to absorb the smell in the air, so avoiding the odor of agarwood is an important maintenance matter. In any environment with a peculiar smell, the agarwood bracelet should be placed in a sealed bag. Agarwood bracelets should not come into contact with chemicals (including cosmetics). Do not use perfume or scented cosmetics when wearing agarwood. Agarwood is a pure natural and precious spice. You must avoid contact with chemical agents.

Agarwood bracelets have very weak resistance to high temperatures and exposure to sunlight. You should avoid exposure to the sun, high-temperature baking, and other situations to prevent the bracelets from cracking.

It is on par with Dalagan and has a very similar smell. The first taste is sweet and cool, followed by a mellow and lingering milky aroma. Most of the surface is covered with oil lines similar to tiger stripes.
